World Heritage Sites

Sambor
Prei Kuk

The temple zone of Sambor Prei Kuk in Cambodia was the capital of the Chenla Empire in the late sixth and early seventh centuries CE. The region has since been overtaken by the surrounding forest, but you can still get a sense of the former city from the imposing buildings that remain.

City of Yazd

Dubbed the City of Windcatchers in reference to the traditional Persian architecture that is found throughout, Yazd in Iran has avoided the swift modernisation that the rest of the country has seen, instead maintaining a sense of Imperialism that harks back to the days of the Persian Empire.

Lake District

Closer to home, the rolling hills of the Lake District have long been a source of wonder, the landscape captivating the minds of artists, photographers and wordsmiths alike. As the 31st British World Heritage Site, the Lake District joins Stonehenge and Canterbury Cathedral, among others.

Assumption
Cathedral

Moscow's Assumption Cathedral has been the site of many a coronation, as well as victim to a number of fires. Restored several times over the years – and at one point turned into a museum – the cathedral has been run by the Russian Orthodox community since 1991.

Très chic

Following the opening of its Amsterdam branch back in 2015, The Hoxton has set its sights on the continent once again with a new venture in Paris. The Hoxton, Paris is the brand's biggest hotel to date, with 172 bedrooms located in a former clothing factory that spans three buildings. Inside, the interior design draws the eye, with bold feature walls and quirky touches.

Cadogan says relax

Those who have visited Chelsea's 11 Cadogan Gardens will know of its stylish, if somewhat bijou, interior. With no room for its own spa, the hotel has partnered with neighbouring wellness specialist Ushvani to create the 11 Cadogan Gardens' Signature Treatment. The session begins with a bespoke massage and ends with a rejuvenating facial. From £665 per night, 11cadogangardens.com

EYE SCANDI

Located in the heart of Copenhagen's historic quarter, Sanders is a lesson in Scandinavian design. The hotel marries minimalism with a rustic charm that oozes warmth. Expect hygge by the bucketload.
